An evening for Nirmit

MONDAY 19 OCTOBER 2026 · 18:30 – 20:30 · CENTRAL LONDON

His twenty-fifth birthday

Nirmit would have been twenty-five on Monday 19 October. We are gathering in London that evening to mark it, and to put something of his into the world.

In the spring he built a website and told almost nobody it existed. He called it Eudaimonia, the Greek word for a life well lived — six essays, written for no audience and no reward, simply because he had something to work out. We found it after he died. It is the clearest thing he left, and on his birthday we are launching it properly, as The Eudaimonias Project.

We would like the room to be full of the people he actually spent his time with. Around fifty of you: King's, SchemeFlow, Pints and Peers, 16VC, and the friends who knew him long before any of it.

THE SHAPE OF THE EVENING

18:30	Arrive Drinks and something to eat. Come straight from work.
19:00	Welcome Harkirit, Nirmit's father. Five minutes.
19:10	The Project goes live The site published properly, in the room, that evening.
19:20	The reading From the book he was in the middle of. Three or four readers, picking up where he stopped.
19:40	Open floor Anyone who wants to say something. No order, no pressure.
19:55	The cards Explained below. Two minutes.
20:00	A toast Twenty-five today.
20:05	Drinks and talking The point of the evening.
20:30	To the pub Ideally wherever Pints and Peers met.

THE READING

On his site Nirmit kept a shelf of what he had been reading. Beside Orwell's Nineteen Eighty-Four it still says: currently reading, forty per cent.

He did not get to finish it. So that evening we will. Three or four people will read aloud from the page he stopped at, a few pages each, and then the book stays open on the table for the rest of the night for anyone who wants to carry on.

We will keep that copy. If you read from it, put your name in the front.

THE CARDS

Nirmit divided his site into three parts. The third he called Pragma — the present tense, what he was building and thinking about at that moment. He left it unfinished.

There will be cards and pens on the tables. Before you leave, please write one thing: something he said to you, something he started in you, something you are going to do about it. Put it in the box by the door.

Those cards go into the section he never finished. They will be the first things in it. His parents will also, that night, learn fifty things about their son that they did not know.

WHERE WE NEED HANDS

The date is close and most of this needs doing in the next few days. If you can take one of these, say so and it is yours.

- The room. We are trying for the Weston Room at the Maughan Library, King's. If you are a King's student, alumnus or staff member who can make that booking, this is the most useful thing anyone can do today.
- The Pints and Peers list. Whoever holds it — please send the invitation round. You reach more of the right people in one message than we can reach in a week.
- SchemeFlow. The team has scattered since the company wound down. If you worked with him there, please find the others.
- Three or four readers. For the book. You do not need to prepare — just be willing to read a few pages aloud.
- The pub. A back room within walking distance, booked from 20:30 for around fifty. If Pints and Peers had a regular place, that is the one.
- Photographs. Someone discreet with a camera. We will want them afterwards even though none of us feels like being photographed.
- The door. Two people to welcome everyone, hand out cards and look after the box.

PRACTICAL NOTES

- Around fifty people. Standing, with seats for those who want them.
- Drinks and light food from 18:30. It spans dinner, so there will be enough to eat.
- No dress code. Nothing black. It is his birthday.
- Bring someone who knew him, even if we have not reached them — especially if we have not reached them. Please reply either way so we have numbers.
